Description:

Filing for bankruptcy protection is a common tactic that is often frustrating to opposing parties. Once a bankruptcy is filed, most litigation activity ceases, but there are many strategic decisions that have to be made fairly quickly.

This presentation covers the variety of tools and options, including advantages and disadvantages, available to litigants when their opposing parties file for bankruptcy relief during the pendency of a case. This information is valuable to litigators who may not be familiar with bankruptcy processes to better prepare their clients for a potential filing and to advise their clients until a bankruptcy specialist is engaged.
